Such data is processed in order to, for example, establish a contractual relationship and provide the relevant services. Pursuant to Art. 6(1)(b) UK GDPR, your data must be processed in order to enter into and perform a contract. In addition, pursuant to Art. 6(1)(f) UK GDPR, it may be necessary to process your data in order to protect our legitimate interests, e.g. for management purposes, internal communications and other administrative purposes. Our legitimate interests are based on the fulfilment of the mutual obligations under the contract entered into between you and us. The data is also processed for advertising and marketing purposes if you have consented to such processing. You may withdraw your consent to processing for advertising and marketing purposes at any time. We will endeavour to keep your personal data accurate and up to date and to not keep the information for longer than is required by law.

What types of data are processed by us?

We process the following categories of data: master data (e.g. name, address), communication data (e.g. phone number, email address) and contract data (e.g. commencement and end of contract).

To whom is your data transmitted?

Access to your data is only granted to those HENSOLDT UK Group functions that need to know it in order to fulfil our obligations. We only transfer your data to a third-party service provider if this is necessary to perform a contract.

Is data transmitted to a third country or an international organisation?

Your data is generally not transmitted to a country outside the UK or EEA. If a service provider in a third country is used for data processing, they are required to guarantee a level of protection corresponding to that of the UK.

How long do we store your data?

Three years after the business relationship has come to an end, we will verify whether we still need your data and whether the erasure of the data is precluded by statutory retention obligations.

Is there an obligation to provide data?

Processing the data collected is necessary in order to enter into a contract between you and us and to perform this contract. If we cannot process the data, we are unable to comply with our contractual obligations to you. If you object to your data being processed, we will have to terminate the contract, unless you only object to your data being processed for advertising and marketing purposes.
